The Coal Question!

Notice to our Customers

The price of coal will advance at the mines at least 50c. per ton at the rate of 10c. per month beginning May 1st next.

Both the United States and Canadian railways, notwithstanding the advanced freight of last year, have not been able to meet running expenses for months past.

The probabilities are that freight rates will be advanced in the near future still higher. Therefore there is no cheap coal in sight.

We urge our customers to lay in their next winter's supply at once before we have to advance prices.

WAR MEMORIAL

The Editor of The Express :

Dear Sir : Among the suggestions as to the form which the County Memorial should assume was one made by Capt. Beverly Simpson, in which he advocated the use of a large boulder brought from its present location in the County to the County Town. This suggestion receives strong support from an authorative article in "The Guardian", Eng., of June 5th, by Prof. C. Baldwin Brown, of Edinburgh University, on the subject of "War Memorials." He says: "Given the right king of material, an effective monument may be formed of stones in the rough. The durability of good granite, its hardness, the large size of its pieces and their irregular fracture, give it, when properly handled, a greatness, a monumental character, that at once suggests the qualities it commemorates in a hero. A big block of granite which may fracture so nobly as to look like a mountain in miniature, with one face smoothed, not polished, for an inscription, conveys in its own way the inherent idea of a War Memorial. It is arresting, symbolic, and in simple but pregnant terms, expressive.

Dr. Cecile Griel.

Dominion Chautauqua Co., Napanee, July 5th to 11th. One of the most interesting speakers of the entire program is Dr. Cecile Griel, who was educated in the United States, France, Germany and Italy, receiving her M. D. degree at the Polyclinic in Rome. When the war broke out she was commandeered by the Italian Government for war work. In this work she was engaged for two years. Wishing to return to America, as she is American-born, she took passage on the ill-fated "Ancona," which was torpedoed on the second day out. After seven hours in an open boat, she was rescued, the only American survivor. When she appears with the Chautauqua her lecture will be on "A Woman on the Italian Front."

BOLSHEVIK SHIPS MAULED.

British Fleet Has Been Busy In Russian Waters.

HELSINGFORS, June 24.—British warships last Wednesday sank or torpedoed the Bolshevik armored cruiser Slava, which sank immediately. The only Russian warship bearing the name of Slava to be found in available lists was sunk by the German squadron on October 17, 1917, in the Gulf of Riga. It seems probable, however, that some other craft was given the name of the Slava, which destroyed in the Russian Admiralty reports as a battleship.

A report received on Friday stated that another Russian cruiser, the Oleg, had been sunk on Wednesday by a British submarine.

The Bolshevik battleship Andrei Pervosvanni is believed to have been sunk by a British torpedo near Kronstadt on Thursday, according to a Finnish naval dispatch quoted in a Helsingfors cablegram to the Daily Mail. The telegram adds that the Bolshevik battleship Petropavlovsk has hoisted the white flag.

The Pervosvanni was built in 1907. It was 464 feet long and had a beam of 80 feet, being manned by 833 men. The Petropavlovsk is one of the 12-latest Russian battleships, displacing 23,370 tons. It is 500 feet long, with a beam of 85 feet and has a complement of 1,100 men.

German Vessels Were Scuttled by Their Crews

Dreadnoughts, Cruisers and Destroyers That Have Been Lying at Scapa Flow Since They Surrendered to the Allies Were All Destroyed and Went Down With the German Flag at the Masthead.

LONDON, June 24.—The German officers and sailors forming the complements of the German ships interned at Scapa Flow, sank most of their fleet on Sunday. All the big ships, the battleships and battle cruisers, excepting the Baden, and numerous smaller craft were sunk, while others went ashore in a half-sunken condition.

Eighteen destroyers were beached by tugs, four still are afloat, while the remainder went under.

The wholesale sinking of the German ships, which came to Scapa Flow to surrender under the terms of the armistice, was carefully arranged by the officers and crews. All explosives had been removed, and therefore the only means of destroying the fleet was by opening the seacocks. The ships went slowly down, with the German flag, which the crews had hoisted, showing at the mastheads.

The crews, composed entirely of Germans, under the terms of the armistice, which did not permit of British guards aboard, took to the boats when the vessels began to settle. When leaving for the shore, the boats were challenged and called upon to surrender. Some of them ignored the summons, and were fired upon, a few casualties resulting.

This stroke apparently was an entire surprise, and the first news reached the London foreign correspondent who was informed by farmers in the neighborhood that they had seen the German ships sinking, with their flags aloft.

The German officers and crews have been made prisoner. None of the officials could offer an opinion as to how they are to be dealt with. The Admiralty at first denied the report, but later confirmed it and issued an official statement.

The statement says:

"According to the latest reports from Scapa Flow all the interned battleships and battle cruisers have sunk, except the battleship Baden, which is still afloat. Five light cruisers have sunk, but three have been beached. Eighteen destroyers were beached by local tugs. Four destroyers are still afloat. The rest of the destroyers have sunk.

"A German rear-admiral and most of the Germans from the ships are now in custody aboard British ships. Some boats from the ships refused to stop when ordered, and were fired upon. The small number of Germans were killed or wounded.

"In accordance with the terms of the armistice, the German ships were interned with skeleton crews as caretakers, and without British guards aboard."

The first news of the sinking of the German fleet was contained in a Thurso despatch to the Exchange Telegraph Company.

Early on Saturday afternoon, a report was circulated by the Exchange Telegraph Company virtually the whole German fleet at Scapa Flow had been sunk, but a few minutes later the news agency asked that it be disregarded, as denied.

A later despatch by the Associated Press from Thurso, said: "The hoisting of the German war flag was the signal for the crews to scuttle the German warships in Scapa Flow. The crews took to the boats, and rowed toward the shore. The guard ships fired at the Germans, who jumped overboard and swam ashore, where they were rounded up."

Admiral Sir Cyprian Bridge, retired, former director of the Intelligence Department, interviewed by the Weekly Despatch with regard to the sinking, said:

"It is a breach of the armistice, and, therefore, almost tantamount to a new act of war, but at this juncture it appears to mean that the German army does not like the peace treaty. It looks like a plan concerted in Berlin."

Commander Kenworthy, M.P., told the Despatch he did not think the sinkings were carried out by order of the German Government, but were acts of mutiny. The Admiralty heads sick of existence at Scapa Flow.

"The Admiralty or the admiral in charge," he said, "cannot be blamed. Rather, the admiralty is responsible is to be censured for not putting British crews aboard. But we are well rid of the ships, which were obsolete."

The political correspondent of the Sunday Times, commenting on the news from Scapa Flow, says that the sole topic in London was general amazement that nothing apparently had been done to safeguard the ships against the possibility of such destruction.

MAN KILLED IN RIOTS

Police and Mob Clash in Winnipeg Streets.

Royal Mounted Police Had to Be Called in as a Result of Disorders That Followed a "Silent Parade," and In Addition to the Alien Killed, Many Citizens Were Seriously Injured.

WINNIPEG, June 24.—On the authority of Brig.-Gen. H. D. B. Ketchen, general officer commanding Military District No. 10, there was a total of 20 casualties among strikers, returned soldiers, sympathizers and onlookers in Saturday's fatal riot. Of these, one Mike Sokolwski, registered alien, was instantly killed by a bullet wound through the heart. An unconfirmed report said that two aliens who were shot and are now in the hospital are in a precarious condition.

Of the 17 other casualties Robt. C. Johnstone, returned soldier, was shot through the left thigh and right knee, but will recover. A young onlooker, Jack Barrett, was shot through the right thigh and will also recover. Another man is said to have been shot through the foot.

The tragic events of Saturday afternoon covered not more than half an hour. At half-past two, perhaps 20,060 persons were massed on Main street with the focus at the City Hall. For the most part they appeared to be strikers, with among them scores of thousand returned soldiers, and they were congregated to witness or take part in the "massed silent parade," which, it was announced Friday night at the meeting in Market Square of returned soldiers would be put on by returned soldiers and sailors. It was intended as a last and final effort to break down the barriers the men claim have been erected against the demands of the general strike in Winnipeg.

On the whole this great mass was orderly. It contained many women, evidently the strikers' families, but no children. Just before half-past two, a small riot developed on the south side of the City Hall Park, around a man who was drunk. Leaders of the crowd besought those involved to quiet, as they would spoil by their rowdiness the whole effect of the silent demonstration.

A twenty-five minutes past two a street car passing on Main street only made its way through the crowd midst continuous booing and with great difficulty, the trolley several times being pulled off the line. Sharp at half-past two the crowd passed along the crossing gathered in the wide thoroughfare of Main street on each side of the car tracks—"fall in." At the head of the crowd was a massive car No. 596 approached from the north, about half-full of passengers, mostly women and children. As it reached Market street it was greeted by a rolling roar of booing, its trolley was pulled off the line, and some dozens were let off. Women and children got out of the car and dispersed among the crowd, so far as it could be learned unhurt. A motorman and motorman remained by their car; the trolley cord having been cut, it remained a fixture at what immediately was to become a scene of battle.

Almost simultaneously with this, instantly the cry went out from the crowd: "Get inside the bloody soldiers," and around the corner of Main street from the south, opposite the Union Bank, swept a solid column of red-coated Royal Northwest Mounted Police. They covered the wide street from gutter to gutter, and behind the ranks of the horsemen came on the run the mob and an occasional shot was heard among the mounted soldiers. A hundred yards behind this first rank came a second rank of khaki-clad horsemen. The mob swept down on the backs of the horsemen and a free throwing of bricks, bottles and any other available missiles began, the horsemen and some men being struck. They rode on, however, mostly several blocks and then after a short interval returned again with the truncheons, and, dividing up into columns of fours on each side of the street, sought to drive the mob back on to the sidewalks.

Except for the efforts of a lieutenant in khaki uniform and on foot who mixed with the crowd and sought to deter them from violence, but was lost in the throng, it had become a case of the police determined on teaching the military a lesson. From alleyways nearby there had been torn up and hurled at the backs of the horsemen. They cantered south again and were lost to sight around the corner of Main street.

Left thus to themselves a few minutes the crowd proceeded to take vengeance on the street car. The conductor and motorman had now fled. The doors were now smashed open and a few minutes later the car was set afire. This only after unavailing efforts on the part of the crowd to overturn it.

The Riot Act was read at 3.30 o'clock. Mayor Grey was attacked on two occasions while reading the act, but his assailants were beaten off by officers with clubs. A detachment of Royal Northwest Mounted Police swung into action as the Riot Act notice was read and charged on the crowd. Attempts to dismount them or to knock them out with stones, bricks and bottles failed, but the crowd refused to disperse.

It was then that the order to use their guns was given, and a volley rang out. The bullets went over the heads of the crowd and there was a general bolting into the side streets. There were more adventurous of the mob persisted in their attacks on the police, and it was during this fighting that the casualties occurred. The dead man is an Austrian.

The Mounted Police had things pretty well in hand when the special constables on foot marched through the streets and the rioting came to an end.

Crusoe and His Island

ANY person with a bowing acquaintance with history, actual, literary, or otherwise, could no doubt call to mind offhand a number of stories which, in spite of their being hopelessly fictitious, have implanted themselves so firmly in the popular fancy, that all the King's horses and all the King's men could not, by this time, budge them. Three, all taken at random, will serve, and curiously enough Defoe is the plaintiff in the case of two of them. They are the confusion of Crusoe's island with Juan Fernandes, the Ride to York, and the existence of the original Old Curiosity Shop. It is of no avail to insist that Dickens himself declared that the Old Curiosity Shop was no more; that the ride to York was good, or bad, history two centuries before Turpin was endowed with it; and that no one who had ever read Robinson Crusoe could confuse the famous island with Juan Fernandes. The man in the street, ignoring that caustic phrase of the great Birreller, "What in the name of Bodley has the public to do with literature?" smiles indulgently, and gets along with his mistake.

Yet, in all seriousness, the question must arise, why should men waste their time arguing as to the original of an island in a story written early in the eighteenth century. The answer is very simple, because men love to be amused. Dr. Johnson once declared that there were only three books in existence which the ordinary reader would rather see lengthened than shortened. Robinson Crusoe was one of them, and if the aforesaid ordinary reader does not perchance know what the other two are, the opportunity is open to him for his amusement. Anyhow Dr. Johnson's famous contemporary, the Frenchman Marmontel, was equally explicit, "Robinson Crusoe," he said, "is the first book I ever read with exquisite pleasure; and I believe every boy in Europe might say the same thing."

About a century later, a critic, with an overpowering attraction to the banal, summed up the attractions of the book in a couple of sentences, which should be preserved in the interests of the gayety of nations:—"If it be inquired by what charm it is that these surprising adventures should have instantly pleased, and always pleased, it will be found that few books have ever so naturally mingled amusement with instruction. The attention is fixed, either by the simplicity of the narration, or by the variety of the incidents; the heart is amended by a vindication of the ways of God to man; and the understanding is informed by various examples, how much utility ought to be preferred to ornament; the young are instructed, while the old are amused."

Even so brilliant a writer as Mr. R. H. Dana joins the worshipping throng, and, in a delightful description, in "Two Years Before the Mast," tells how, as the brig Pilgrim left the "deep blue cloud" of the island behind it, he "gave a parting look and bade farewell to the most romantic spot any eyes had ever seen."

All of which is very good, but from Juan Fernandes to the mouth of the Orinoco happens to be some 3,200 miles, measuring from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and with all South America in between. And it was "near the mouth of the Great River of Oroonoque," as Defoe is careful to insist, on the frontispiece of the first edition and in the story itself, that Crusoe's island lay. Indeed, in order that there should be no mistake whatever about the matter, Defoe brought out, in a conversation between Crusoe and Friday, the fact that the land the former "perceived to the west and northwest was the great island Trinidad on the north point of the mouth of the river."

How, then did the wonderful muddle arise? It is all extremely simple. Defoe, like Shakespeare and innumerable other writers, borrowed his plot ready made. Seven years before Captain Woodes Rogers had published a book, in which he had told the story of how he had rescued Alexander Selkirk from his self-imposed marooning, if the word may be coined, on the island of Juan Fernandes. The idea appealed to the fancy of Defoe, just as later it did to Cowper and many others. The effect on Cowper was seen in the well-known poem beginning, "I am monarch of all I survey," on Defoe, in Robinson Crusoe, which, be it said, owes nothing at all but its idea to Selkirk or to Rogers.

Still, when the eighteen century was young, every man knew all about Selkirk and every boy had read Crusoe, and knew that Crusoe was Selkirk. As time went on, what followed became inevitable. Crusoe was Selkirk, Selkirk's island was Juan Fernandes, therefore Juan Fernandes was Crusoe's island. Post hoc, propter hoc, what more could anyone demand. But,—Defoe explains, carefully, that it was not. Yes! but so did Dickens explain that the Curiosity Shop had been pulled down, and Defoe, again, that Nevinson to York. The fate of the Curiosity Shop, the position of Crusoe's island, these are details which are forgotten as soon as learned. Our business is with Codlin and Short, Dick Swiveller and Marchioness, Sally Brass and Quilp, with Crusoe and Friday, and all the other puppets. The positions of islands, the sites of shops, such things are the affairs of the surveyor and the hydrographer. As for the Ride to York, the Circus settled all that, decades and decades ago.

Steel.

Steel is a kind of iron which can easily be hammered out thin without cracking and can be made extremely hard by being heated and then cooled quickly. It is different from ordinary iron because of the amount of carbon in it. Wrought iron contains less carbon than steel and so it can not be made so hard; cast iron contains more and so is brittle.

Are Here Told the Best Remedy for Their Troubles.

Fremont, O.—"I was passing through the critical period of life, being forty-six years of age and had all the symptoms incident to that change — heat flashes, nervousness, and was in a general run down condition, so it was hard for me to do my work. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was recommended to me as the best remedy for my troubles, which it surely proved to be. I feel better and stronger in every way since taking it, and the annoying symptoms have disappeared."—Mrs. M. Goddek, 925 Napoleon St., Fremont, Ohio.

ROSE FROM THE RANKS

ENLISTED AS PRIVATE AND BECAME ACTING COLONEL.

The Story of Major John Girvan Who Carried the Colors of the Famous "Fifteenth Battalion" Into Germany—He Was a Real Civilian Soldier.

JOHN GIRVAN left Valcartier in 1914 a private in Company A 48th Highlanders. From August, 1918, until Armistice Day he was in command of Toronto's "famous Fifteenth." He carried the colors into Germany last December, and he returns to Toronto as Major John Girvan, M.C., D.S.O., Croix de Guerre, the respected second in command of the Highlanders' unit.

It is given to few men to "carry on" through four years on the fields in France, but John Girvan has not only fought through these years—he has given to Scotland and Canada a wonderful service—the service of a "charmed" life, the gallantry of a Sir Galahad, the undaunted pluck and grit of his native Island of Bute, and the best of a born brain for leadership.

His career to military glory had a romantic beginning, too. With W. Sparks, manager at the Toronto General Post Office, and father of Deputy Earl Sparks, his best chum, John Girvan was holidaying at Duncan Lake, in the Gowganda district, in August, 1914. The campers heard of the outbreak in Europe, but canoeing and fishing banished the start of the world conflagration from their minds until Mr. Sparks was notified by wire to come home as he wanted to see Earl before he left for overseas.

When Mr. Sparks came home, he found that Earl was at Valcartier.

Later, when the first contingent was about ready to leave, Mr. Sparks confided to John Girvan that he was going to Valcartier to say goodbye to Earl.

"I'll get a day off," said Girvan "and go with you."

It was a lovely fall evening at Valcartier when John Girvan saw his pal swinging down the line of a company in the 80th uniform.

Without a word John Girvan turned to Mr. Sparks: "You take my clothes home. I am not going back. I am going with Earl."

Mr. Sparks brought John's business suit to Toronto, and then sailed away a Highlander under Corpl. Sparks, in the famous Fifteenth.

It was the great sorrow when Earl fell at Ypres in April, 1915, but Pte. Girvan carried on right into Germany.

His decorations give slight recognition of his real service. It is known only to a few. True, he has been specially mentioned in despatches at various times, and his high ability has been recognized in flattering terms on his military papers, but Major Girvan and his parents are of the soldier stock, and they don't talk.

An awful night before a disastrous engagement some of the men of the Fifteenth under Girvan were in the trenches, dispirited, and somewhat nervous. In the glare of the light from the Hun line the officer mounted the parapet and walked along the "suicide" path, with no thought for himself—with an order here, a word of encouragement there and a cheering, nonchalance that brought the morale of the line to the highest pitch. "It was not the danger to himself that counted with us," said one, "but it was that princely thoughtfulness for the men."

It is the story of a Scottish boy who found himself in Toronto. John Pollard Girvan was born on the west coast of Bute, on Kilchatton Bay, Isle of Bute, in November, 1885. After a brief schooling at home he took a short course at Edinburgh, when his father, Archibald Girvan, decided to move to Toronto. John came out in 1906, and that fall went to the post office. It was but a short time before the then Deputy Postmaster recognized his ability. "He made himself at once a very valuable man." On the night shift there had been considerable friction, and John Girvan was picked out over older members to take charge of the city sorting staff on the night side. His judgment, fairness and firmness were demonstrated, for the affairs of the department were soon running smoothly.

His prowess with the boxing gloves and his ability to organize and help in the concerts of the staff were recognized by numerous presentations to him. It was at this time that John began taking an interest in sculling, and, joining the Argonaut Club with Joe Wright and Capt. Sinclair and "Tommy" Carson, he developed into an oarsman of merit. As a bow-man Girvan had few equals. In 1911 he rowed bow in the champion junior eight, and the following year he won the eight-oar at Montreal. When the Argonauts were the champion fours of Canada in 1913 Girvan was a member of the crew.

When the big scrap was called in Europe Girvan dropped the oar here and put on the mitts for a round with the Hun, and he stayed for the "knock-out" count. When he was wounded at Courcelette in 1915, and sent home for three months, his friends urged him to quit. His bit had been done and done well, for he had his field promotions then. He enjoyed his furlough, talked only of his men, and went quietly back to his post in France. He has been there ever since, and it was entirely fitting that the signal honor of carrying the colors from London to Brussels was given to the major who had taken Col. Bent's place last August, and had so successfully carried the battalion's destiny through the big fall offensive. He was also in charge of the Highland troops of the Third Brigade when they were reviewed by King Albert at Liege.

Major Girvan had no military training previous to his enlistment in this war. He is a real civilian-soldier.

ENGLAND'S REVOLUTIONS.

The Experts Say There Will Be No Bolshevism.

The English habitually make changes in their political, economic and social life slowly. It might almost be said that the British Empire has been built on a policy of industrious conservatism. The war, of course, upset the orderly sequence of events in the lives of Englishmen, and some observers have lately contended that it introduced them to the possibilities of organized violence as a means of accomplishing some much needed reforms. In other words, there was a feeling in some quarters that English soldiers would come home, overthrow the Government, seize the large estates, set up new factory, mine and land laws, and in general do a little Bolshevik execution.

The industrial commission of experts which the United States sent to England a few months ago to find out about how strong the British Government is with the people, has reported that a revolution in England is not only a possibility, but a strong probability, but there is no Bolshevism, nor will there be. The widespread destruction of property merely to satisfy a grudge or emphasize an argument or make a holiday for a lot of born vandals does not, it appears, appeal to English workingmen. Their idea of a revolution is well-behaved seizure of the Government by expression of opinion at the polls. In short, it is nothing more serious than a democratic people deciding by lawful methods how they will get along.

Lloyd George is himself a firebrand, according to the English idea. In he not committed to the policy that there is a remedy for the fact that in England a great many people have no room to move about while a few have a great deal more room than they can possibly need? The great estates in England are doomed. Hundreds of estates, many of them larger than 20,000 acres, are being sold at auction—or at least being advertised. The wealthy, of course, have put up most of the money for the war, their fortunes being almost confiscated, and perhaps the land cannot be made to yield as it did before the war. Shop properties are also being disposed of, and many manufacturers have either sold out or completely altered their attitude toward labor. These are signs of a great change, and what is a great change but a revolution?

England's labor troubles have produced a few labor leaders who are statesmen. These men are not going to sit by and see British industry paralyzed by Bolshevism, and British foreign trade sacrificed at a time when every nation is trying to get hold of all the foreign trade it can. There is much labor unrest in England, and Lloyd George is worried. He must answer to the people for several campaign promises. He probably wishes he had not gone so far as to intimate that in the end Germany would have to pay Britain's war debt, for that touches on the subject of Germany's foreign trade, which brings in the safety of British foreign trade. Beneath the surface, however, is the world's faith in the common sense of British labor. Something may happen to stampede the unions, but it will not be Bolshevism.

A Memorial at Tapley.

Premier Borden unveiled at Tapley, Bucks, England, on April 4th, a memorial to those who have died at the Canadian Red Cross Hospital there. The memorial takes the form of a female figure typifying Victory, and stands in the beautiful little cemetery on Mrs. Astor's estate, adjoining the hospital cemetery, being in the form of an Italian garden.

Quite a Difference.

"Say it!"

"One is inebriated with the exuberance of his own verbosity, and the other is verbose with the exuberance of his own inebriation."

What About That Wasted Five per cent?

In June W-S-S. Cost $4.05

Most of us fritter away at least five per cent. of our weekly wages in trifles.

If we stopped to reckon it up, we would find it hard to remember where the money went. If we could make that money earn more money without troubling to think out a plan or attend to details, we would consider that we had done a good stroke of business. The Government has made it possible for us to do that. Here is the plan:

You say to your employer: "Every week I want you to hold back five per cent. of my wages and invest them in War Savings Stamps. When you have bought a War Savings Stamp with my money, put it in my pay envelope. Go on doing that for a year." You will never miss that five per cent. which you had previously frittered away. But at the end of a year you will have a little package of Stamps which, in 1924, will be worth $5.00 for every $4.00 odd you pay for them now.

The guarantee of safety behind the War Savings Stamps is the whole Dominion of Canada.

Make Your Savings Serve You and Serve Your Country—Invest Them in War Savings Stamps.

Next Thursday is Circus Day

Let the joy be unconfined ! The Sparks Circus will reach here Thursday, July 3rd, in its march about the country, and its proprietors bid patrons come to its monumental entertainment with keyed to the highest possible point. Even then, they are sure, the most vivid imagination will be startled and the most sanguine hope outdone.

The big amusement institution comes eager to prove that it is one of the greatest of its kind, country and era.

It comes with the proud realization that all this season its throngs of patrons limited in number only to its seating capacity—that itself bigger than ever before in its history—have invariably united in one grand, swelling chorus of vociferous praise and rapt wonder:

Soon after daybreak Thursday morning it is expected the long railroad trains which are required to transport the circus will have reached the town. All arrangements have been completed for their undelayed progress into the railroad yards and for the speedy emptying of the flat, stock and sleeping cars. The boss canvasman and his horde of brawny followers will reach the show grounds first and immediately the work of creating the canvas city of a day will begin.

The street parade is scheduled to leave the show grounds at ten o'clock in the morning. There is promised a stunningly grand and glorious pageantric prelude to the performance on the show grounds. In bewildering array will be viewed georgeous military legions ; massive splendidly ornate chariots, floats, vans and tableau wagons; celebrated bands and novel musical equipages; hordes of the world's most famous clowns and jesters; fierce wild beasts in open dens with their daring trainers; herds of richly decked elephants and camels; wardrobes and trappings that represent a fortune.

When the circus opens its gates at one o'clock in the afternoon to receive the human parade of patrons, the crowds will stop to comment and observe in the menagerie tent will find dens of rare and curious beasts ranged in a great ellipse.

With Dominion Chautauqua, Napanee, July 5th to 11th. "What kind of a lecture does this young Evans give," is a question frequently asked of representatives, and it isn't often that a representative can tell, for Dr. Evans has a habit of "putting over" a lecture which defies description. Two years ago Dr. Evans made his initial appearance in a Pennsylvania town, in which a Lyceum course had been conducted for many years. When he did to the folks there may be judged by the following extract from a letter received from the men in charge of the course. "This young Welshman was the greatest bargain we have had in a dozen years experience. Men and folks hanging over the bleacher rail until the last man was out in the ninth innings. Even the gentlemen who got soaked under the fifth rib by his conclusions, didn't know they had been wounded. He has a voice that would coax the scariest calf up to the trough and let him halter him, and his method of approach is fresh and daring. Dr. Evans is a nephew of Mr. David Lloyd George, Premier of England. Hear him.

THE CRICKET

At last the day has come when we can't grouch about the condition of the roads. The new roads in the town to all outward appearances are first-class and a credit to us. There are those people who think that they are not being built properly, whether they are right or not remains to be seen. Of one thing we are certain, that the council are doing what they consider best, and after all that is about all a "feller" can do.

One of the most noticeable peculiarities of the average Napanean is his timidity or unwillingness to cast away any bouquets. He hears of a hero, but before he will say, "You are a hero," he goes and requires from all his neighbors whether by any possible chance the man is not quite a hero, then perhaps he may say sorrowfully, "You are a hero." The same with the roads. They say, "The road look all right, but wait till you see what the winter does to them." However, let them stand and if they can't be stopped, the attempt has been made to make the roads.

But when we are dishing out the laurels, why say, "Good for you, Councillor MacGregor"? No doubt Councillor MacGregor has helped, but we say, "Good for you John Vine, and all those men who levelled the broken stone and brushed the roads and levelled the tar.

• • • • •

We asked a man if he was going to Chautauqua next week. He said, "I dunno, I don't go East of Montreal very often."

• • • • •

And who said we lacked life in this village ? Why we have a big day on the First, another on the Third, more fun on the Fifth and the Eleventh and still another on the Twelfth. Now with a few more days and Black Hand outrage tacked on we can begin to puff and say, to New Yorkers, "Yes, your town's all right, but you just oughta see Napanee."

• • • • •

Notwithstanding the notice to the people that they must clean their backyards before May first, we have seen one or two in a very disgraceful state of disorder and it draws on toward the first of July. Perhaps an ill-kept lot is not so offensive if it is screened from the public eye, but one of which I speak opens right on the street, and a pretty sight it is. It reminds of the entry into Cambrai.

• • • • •

Things the returning citizen looks for after an absence of years: The open ditch in the middle of the road.. The daily dog fight on front street. The animal trainer leading his cow (or pony as the case may be) up and down the main drag. The loitering of busy men in front of the large hotels. The Councillor standing by the workmen on the road. The display of wares in front of the various stores. The peanut man. The ambitious fellow clinging like doorways of the pool rooms. The man in the arm chair in the middle of the sidewalk on John street. The debates on the street corners, and the nearest ice cream parlor.

• • • • •

Sometimes we get things by asking for them, and sometimes things are forced upon us. For instance, we got prohibition because the majority favored it, and now the Senate wants to force the booze upon us.

Neighbors are you aware of the fact that you live in one of Ontario's prettiest towns ? Are you aware of the fact that Napanee is one of the best spots for your children to live in ? Don't you agree that every boy and girl should learn to swim and handle a boat, and to take part in all aquatic sports ? And don't you agree that this town has the best little old river for such things in Canada ? But where can our children go to swim ? To the docks where they must undress and dress in the glare of the public eye. The public think that the children by so doing are offending them and get wrathful and cause signs to be put up, "No swimming here. The kiddies don't know they are offending. Why prevent them swimming? What is the remedy ? Why put up bathing houses down at the docks and some above the falls ! It would add but little to our taxes and it would be worth it to know that the kids are enjoying themselves. The great trouble with Napanee, and many other Eastern towns, is, the fear of the citizen that some improvement will shoot his taxes up another mill ! We are selfish, We must conquer selfishness before all other things. Just because you might not ever use a bathing house is no reason why you shouldn't help build a few. The cost is a most trivial matter. The upkeep could be paid by ticket or some scheme that would keep the cost off your tax bill. Help the Kiddies ! They will remember and perhaps do something for us when we get old and they are the ratepayers. Let us try it ! And boats, what about boats ? If the children want a boat for the day, or a week.—What ? We see the poor child sitting on dried land looking mournful, he can't afford to buy a boat, but he could rent one if there was a boat livery with more than one boat in it. This is a gentle hint to some progressive individual or corporation to get busy and start a boat livery. Business hint. There's pickin's in it !

Mr. Roosevelt made this statement to an immune audience in Carnegie Hall, New York, on the night of May 7th, 1918. Mr. Skeyhill holds the unique record of raising $25,000,000 in twenty-five minutes at one lecture for war purposes. He has participated in many battles, been wounded, blinded, restored to sight by a clever operation, and will be in Napanee to lecture to us. His subject is "Fighting the Turks at the Dardanelles." NEW TANLAC PLANT IS NOW COMPLETED
Magnificent New Labratory Has Daily Capacityy of 36,000 Bottles.

What is said to be one of the largest pharmaceutical laboratories in the United States has been completed at Dayton, Ohio, for the manufacture of Tanlac, the well-known medicine, which, according to recent reports is now having the largest sale of any medicine of its kind in the world.

The erection of the new plant was made necessary by the rapid growth of the business, as the older plant was found to be wholly inadequate to supply the ever-increasing demand which at the present rate of sale will amount to more than five million bottles for the present year alone.

By the erection of this plant the manufacturers of Tanlac are giving to the world just one more evidence of the remarkable growth and expansion of their business, and of their absolute confidence in its future.

This announcement will be read with interes not only by the many thousands of Tanlac agents scattered throughout every state of the Union and throughout Canada, but by the millions who have used it beneficially as well.

The new building occupies 60,000 square feet of floor space. It is six stories in height, practically fire-proof throughout, and is of striking architectural design. It also has private railway facilities.

This beautiful new structure now stands in striking contrast beside the older building where Tanlac was first made.

Visitors to the laboratories are strongly impressed with the extremely modern character of the equipment. Everything is provided and splendidly arranged to promote systematic and rapid production. The very latest machinery and devices known to invention and pharmaceutical science are here used.

The interior throughout is finished in spotless white, and all of the large force of employees wear white uniforms, which they are required to change daily. The main offices on the first floor are all finished in Carara marble and mahogany.

The entire process of manufacture is conducted under absolutely sanitary conditions. Even the bottles made expressly to contain Tanlac are washed and sterilized electrically by the ultra violet ray process. They are then filled by automatic machinery and the finished product is therefore never touched by human hands.

When Tanlac was introduced into Canada history repeated itself, and the demand which has been created in the United States was quickly duplicated in the Dominion Provinces. As a result, it was recently found necessary to establish another Tanlac Labratory at Windsor, Canada, which is on a somewhat smaller scale than the plant at Dayton, but is no less modernly equipped.

These new facilities give a daily capacity of 36,000 bottles, but as Tanlac is rapidly being introduced into foreign countries it is probably only a question of a few years before even large facilities will become necessary.

While the manufacturers are necessarily working for capicity production it is a fundamental rule of the Tanlac Laboratories that the quality of the medicine shall never be sacrificed to secure quantity output.

Uniform quality is guaranteed by a series of careful inspections by expert chemists, from the time the roots, herbs, and barks are received in their rough state from all parts of the globe until their medicinal properties have been extracted by the most approved processes. The finished medicine is then bottled, labelled, and shipped out to the tens of thousands of druggists throughout the United States and Canada, to supply a demand never before equalled for this or any other medicine.

The executive sales offices are located in Atlanta, Georgia and occupy almost an entire floor of the Fourth National Bank Building of that city.

Tanlac is sold in Napane at WALLACE'S Drug Store, in Camden East by R. J. OSTER, in Wagarville by S. JACKSON. (advt)

Napanee had a grand opportunity to score in the eighth. Loucks singled down 3rd base line, Allison hit to right field and fielder misjudged ball and both runners safe. Loucks was caught asleep off second. Paul forced Allison at second, Scrimshaw scratched a hit down third base line and reached first, but Johnston popped to Pitcher., Earl Loucks pitching for Napanee and retired side on two flies and a strike out.

Again in the ninth Napanee lost another chance to score. Dunbar drove a liner through short and McNeill hit into a double play, Rooks doubled to right field and E. Loucks struck out.

How to make a creamy beauty lotion for a few cents.

The juice of two fresh lemons strained into a bottle containing three ounces of orchard white makes a whole quarter pint of the most remarkable lemon skin beautifier at about the cost one must pay for a small jar of the ordinary cold creams. Care should be taken to strain the lemon juice through a fine cloth so no lemon pulp gets in, then this lotion will keep fresh for months. Every woman knows that lemon juice is used to bleach and remove such blemishes as freckles, sallowness and tan and is the ideal skin softener, whitener and beautifier.

Just try it! Get three ounces of orchard white at any drug store and two lemons from the grocer and make up a quarter pint of this sweetly fragrant lemon lotion and massage it daily into the face, neck, arms and hands.

CHAPTER I.

The Crown Prince Runs Away.

The Crown Prince sat in the royal box and swung his legs. This was hardly princely, but the royal legs did not quite reach the floor from the high crimson-velvet seat of his chair.

Prince Ferdinand William Otto was bored. His royal robes, consisting of a pair of blue serge trousers, a short Eton jacket, and a stiff, rolling collar of white linen, irked him.

He had been brought to the opera house under a misapprehension. His aunt, the Archduchess Annunciata, had strongly advocated "The Flying Dutchman," and his English governess, Miss Braithwaite, had read him some inspiring literature about it. So here he was, and the Flying Dutchman was not ghostly at all, nor did it fly. And instead of flying, after dreary eons of singing, it was moved off on creaky rollers by men whose shadows were thrown grotesquely on the sea backing.

The orchestra, assisted by a bass solo and intermittent thunder in the wings, was making a deafening din. One of the shadows on the sea backing took out its handkerchief and wiped its nose.

Prince Ferdinand William Otto looked across at the other royal box, and caught his Cousin Hedwig's eye. She also had seen the handkerchief; she took out her own scrap of linen, and mimicked the shadow. Then, Her Royal Highness the Archduchess Annunciata being occupied with the storm, she winked across at Prince Ferdinand William Otto.

In the opposite box were his two cousins, the Princesses Hedwig and Hilda, attended by Hedwig's lady in waiting. Hedwig was eighteen. The crown prince liked Hedwig better than Hilda. Although she had been introduced formally to the court at the Christmas-eve ball, and had been duly presented by her grandfather, the king, with the usual string of pearls and her own carriage, she still ran off now and then to have tea with the crown prince and Miss Braithwaite in the school room at the palace; and she could eat a great deal of bread and butter.

The crown prince yawned, although it was but the middle of the afternoon. Catching Hedwig's eye, he ran his fingers up through his thick yellow hair and grinned. Hedwig blushed. She had confided to him once, while they were walking in the garden at the summer palace, that she was thinking of being in love with a young lieutenant who was attached to the king's suite. The prince—who was called Otto, for short, by the family, because he actually had eleven names—the prince had been much interested. For some time afterward he had bothered Miss Braithwaite to define being in love, but he had had no really satisfactory answer.

In pursuance of his quest for information, he had grown quite friendly with the young officer, whose name was Larisch, and had finally asked to have him ride with him at the royal riding school. The grim old king had granted the request, but it had been quite fruitless so far after all. Lieutenant Larisch only grew quite red as to the ears when love was mentioned, although he appeared not unwilling to hear Hedwig's name.

So now Ferdinand William Otto ran his fingers through his fair hair, which was a favorite gesture of the lieutenant's, and Hedwig blushed. The archduchess, sitting well back, was nodding. Just outside the royal box, on the red velvet sofa, General Mettlich, who was the chancellor, and had come because he had been invited and stayed outside because he said he liked to hear music, not see it, was sound asleep. His martial bosom, with its gold braid, was rising and falling peacefully. Beside him lay the prince's crown, a small black derby hat.

Prince Ferdinand William Otto considered it all very wearisome. If one could only wander around the corridor or buy a sandwich from the stand at the foot of the great staircase—or, better still, if one could only get to the street, alone, and purchase one of the fig women that Miss Braithwaite so despised! The crown prince felt in his pocket, where his week's allowance of pocket money lay comfortably untouched.

He meditated. He could go out quickly, and be back before they knew it. Even if he only wandered about the corridor, it would stretch his short legs. And outside it was a fine day. It looked already like spring.

With the trepidation of a canary who finds his cage door open, and, hoping to the threshold, surveys the world before venturing to explore it, Prince Ferdinand William Otto rose to his feet, tiptoed past the Archduchess Annunciata, who did not move, and looked around him from the doorway.

He picked up his hat and concealed it by his side. Then nonchalantly, as if to stretch his legs by walking ten feet up the corridor and back, he passed the dressing room door. Another moment, and he was out of sight around a bend of the passageway, and before him lay liberty.

Not quite! At the top of the private staircase reserved for the royal family a guard commonly stood. He had moved a few feet from his post, however, and was watching the stage through the half-open door of a private loge.

Prince Ferdinand William Otto passed behind him with outward calmness. At the top of the public staircase, however, he hesitated. Here, everywhere, were brass-buttoned officials of the opera house. A garderobe woman stared at him curiously. The little prince looked at the woman with appeal in his eyes. Then, with his heart thumping, he ran past her, down the white marble staircase, to where the great doors promised liberty.

Olga, the wardrobe woman, came out from behind her counter, and stood looking down the marble staircase after the small flying figure.

The old soldier who rented opera glasses at the second landing, and who had left a leg in Bosnia, leaned over the railing. "Look at that!" he exclaimed. "He will break a leg, the young rascal! Once I could have—but there, he is safe! The good God watches over fools and children."

"It looked like the little prince," said the wardrobe woman. "I have seen him often—he has the same bright hair."

But the opera-glass man was not listening. He had drawn a long sausage from one pocket and a roll from the other, and now, retiring to a far window, he stood placidly eating—a bite of sausage, a bite of bread. His mind was in Bosnia, with his leg. And because old Adelbert's mind was in Bosnia, and because one hears with the mind, and not with the ear, he did not hear the sharp question of the sentry who ran down the stairs and paused for a second at the cloak-room. Well for Olga, too, that old Adelbert did not hear her reply.

"He has not passed here," she said, with wide and honest eyes, but with an ear toward old Adelbert. "An old gentleman came a moment ago and got a sandwich, which he had left in his overcoat. Perhaps this is whom you are seeking?"

The sentry cursed, and ran down the staircase, the nails in his shoes striking sharply on the marble.

Olga of the cloak room leaned over her checks, with her lips curved up in a smile. "The little one!" she thought. "And such courage! He will make a great king! Let him have his prank like the other children, and—God bless him and keep him!"

The crown prince was just a trifle dazzled by the brilliance of his success. He paused for one breathless moment under the porte-cochere of the opera house; then he took a long breath, turned to the left; and was at once swallowed up in the street crowd. It seemed very strange to him. Not that he was unaccustomed to crowds. Had he not, that very Christmas, gone shopping in the city, accompanied only by one of his tutors and Miss Braithwaite, and bought for his grandfather, the king, a burnt wood box, which might hold either neckties or gloves, and for his cousins silver photograph frames?

But this was different, and for a rather peculiar reason. Prince Ferdinand William Otto had never seen the back of a crowd! The public was always lined up, facing him, smiling and bowing and God-blessing him. Prince Ferdinand William Otto had never known the backs could be so rigid. It was most interesting.

The next tour was full of remarkable things. For one, he dodged behind a street car and was almost run over by a taxicab. The policeman on the corner came out, and taking Ferdinand William Otto by the shoulder, gave him a talking to and a shaking. Ferdinand William Otto was furious, but policy kept him silent; which proves conclusively that the crown prince had not only intuitive wisdom in his flight—but self-control and diplomacy. Lucky country, to have in prospect such a king!

Prince Ferdinand William Otto had the fulfillment of a great desire in his small, active mind. This was nothing less than a ride on the American scenic railroad, which had secured a concession in a far corner of the park. Hedwig's lieutenant had described it to him—how one was taken in a small car to a dizzy height, and then turned loose on a track which dropped giddily and rose again, whirled one through sheet-iron tunnels of incredible blackness, thrust one out over a gorge, whirled one in mad curves around corners of precipitous heights, and finally landed one, panting, breathless, bewildered, and reeling, but safe, at the very platform where one had purchased one's ticket three eternities, which were only three short minutes, before.

As the early spring twilight fell, the gas lamps along the allee, always burning, made a twin row of pale stars ahead. At the end, even as the wanderer gazed, he saw myriads of tiny red, white, and blue lights, strung as in the air, outlining the crags and peaks of the sheet iron mountain which was his destination. The land of desire was very near!

There came to him, in jerks, too, the occasional rumble that told of some patitating soul being at that moment hurled and twisted and joyously thrilled, as per the lieutenant's description.

Now it is a strange thing, but true, that one does not reach the land of desire alone; because the half of pleasure is the sharing of it with some one else, and the land of desire, also, is not the land of desire at all. Quite suddenly, Prince Ferdinand William Otto discovered that he was lonely. At that moment there was a soft whirring off to one side of him, and a yellow bird, rising and falling erratically on the breeze, careened suddenly and fell at his feet.

Prince Ferdinand William Otto bent down and picked it up. It was a small toy aeroplane, with yellow silk planes, guy ropes of waxed thread, and a wooden rudder, its motive power vested in a tightly rewound rubber. One of the wings was bent. Ferdinand William Otto straightened it, and looked around for the owner.

A small boy was standing under the next gas lamp. "Gee!" he said in English. "Did you see it go that time?"

Prince Ferdinand William Otto eyed the stranger. He was about his own age, and was dressed in a short jacket of corduroy trousers, much bloomed at the knee, a pair of yellow Russia-leather shoes that reached well to his calves, and, over all, a shaggy white sweater, rolling almost to his chin. On the very back of his head he had the smallest cap that Prince Ferdinand William Otto had ever seen.

"This is the best time for flying," he said, in his perfect English. "All the exhibition flights are at sundown."

The boy walked slowly ever and stood looking down at him. "You ought to see it fly from the top of Pike's Peak!" he remarked. He had caught sight of the despised derby, and his eyes widened, but with instinctive good breeding he ignored it. "That's Pike's Peak up there."

He indicated the very top of the land of desire. The prince stared up.

"How does one get up?" he queried. "Ladders. My father's the manager. He lets me up sometimes."

Prince Ferdinand William Otto stared with new awe at the boy. He found the fact much more remarkable than if the stranger had stated that his father was the king of England. Kings were, as you may say, directly in Prince Ferdinand William Otto's line, but scenic railroads—

"I had thought of taking a journey on it," he said, after a second's reflection. "Do you think your father will sell me a ticket?"

"Billy Grimm will. I'll go with you."

The prince rose with alacrity. Then he stopped. He must, of course, ask the strange boy to be his guest. But the tickets! Perhaps his allowance was not sufficient.

"I must see first how much it costs," he said with dignity.

The other boy laughed. "Oh, gee! You come with me. It won't cost anything," he said, and led the way toward the towering lights.

For Bobby Thorpe to bring a small boy to ride with him was an everyday affair. Billy Grimm, at the ticket window, hardly glanced at the boy who stood, trembling with anticipation, in the shadow of the booth.

The car came, and they climbed in. Perhaps, as they moved off, Prince Ferdinand William Otto had a qualm, occasioned by the remembrance of the English child who had met an untimely end; but if he did, he pluckily hid it.

"Put your lid on the floor of the car," said Bobby Thorpe, depositing his own atom there. "Father says, if you do that, you're perfectly safe."

Prince Ferdinand William Otto divined that this referred to his hat, and drew a small breath of relief. And then they were off, up an endless, clicking roadway, where at the top the car hung for a breathless second over the gulf below; then, fairly launched, out on a trestle, with the city far beneath them, and only the red, white, and blue lights for company; and into a tunnel, filled with roaring noises and swift-moving shadows. Then came the end of all things—a dying leap down, a heart-breaking, delicious thrill, an upward sweep just as the strain was too great for endurance.

Above the roaring of the wind in their ears, neither child had heard the flying feet of a dozen horses coming down the allee. They never knew that a hatless young lieutenant, white-lipped with fear, had checked his horse to its haunches at the ticket booth, and demanded to know who was in the land of desire.

"Only the son of the manager, and a boy friend of his," replied Billy Grimm, in what he called the lingo of the country. "What's wrong? Lost anybody?"

But Hedwig's lieutenant had wheeled his horse without a word, and, jumping him over the hedge of the allee, was off in a despairing search of the outskirts of the park, followed by his cavalrymen.

As the last horse leaped the hedge and disappeared, the car came to a stop at the platform. Quivering, Prince Ferdinand William Otto reached down for the despised hat.

"Would you like to go around again?" asked Bobby, quite casually.

His highness gasped with joy. "If—if you would be so kind!" he said.

And at the lordly wave of Bobby's hand, the car moved on.

CHAPTER II.

Disgraced.

At eight o'clock that evening the Crown Prince Ferdinand William Otto approached the palace through the public square. He approached it slowly, for two reasons. First, he did not want to go back. Second, he was rather frightened. He had an idea that they would be disagreeable.

There seemed to be a great deal going on at the palace. Carriages were rolling in under the stone archway and, having discharged their contents, mostly gentlemen in uniform, were moving off with a thundering of hoofs that reached from the vaulted roof of the entrance. All the lights were on in the wing where his grandfather, the King, lived alone. As his grandfather hated lights, and went to bed early, Prince Ferdinand William Otto was slightly puzzled.

He was very dirty. His august face was streaked with soot, and his august hands likewise. His small derby hat was carefully placed on the very back of his head at the angle of the American boy's ease, as the collar had scratched his neck, he had, at Bobby's suggestion, taken it off and rolled it up. He decided, as he waited in the square, to put it on again. Miss Braithwaite was very peculiar about collars.

Came a lull in the line of carriages. Prince Ferdinand William Otto took a long breath and started forward. As he advanced he stuck his hands in his pockets and swaggered a trifle. It was, as nearly as possible, an exact imitation of Bobby Thorpe's walk. And to keep up his courage, he quoted that young gentleman's farewell speech to himself: "What d' you care? They won't eat you, will they?"

Prince Ferdinand William Otto stood in the shadows and glanced across. The sentries stood like wooden men, but something was wrong in the court yard inside. The guards were all standing, and there seemed to be a great many of them. And just as he had made up his mind to take the plunge, so to speak, a part of his own regiment of cavalry came out from the court yard with a thundering of hoofs, wheeled at the street, and clattered off.

Very unusual, all of it.

The Crown Prince Ferdinand Otto felt in his pocket for his handkerchief, and, moistening a corner with his tongue, wiped his face. Then he wiped his shoes. Then, with his hands in his trousers pockets, he sauntered into the light.

The two sentries made no sign when they saw Ferdinand William Otto approaching. But one of them forgot to bring his musket to salute, but crossed it himself instead. And something strained around the other sentry's lower jaw suddenly relaxed into a smile as his royal highness threw a hand from its refuge and saluted. He glanced at one, then at the other, rather sheepishly, hesitated between them, clapped his hat on more securely, and marched in.

"The young rascal!" he said the second sentry to himself. And by turning his head slightly—for a sentry learns to see all around like a horse, without twisting his neck—he watched him runaway into the palace.

Prince Ferdinand William Otto went up the stone staircase. Here and there he passed guards who stared and saluted. Had he not been obsessed with the vision of Miss Braithwaite, he would have known that relief followed in his wake. Messengers clattered down the staircase to the court yard. Other messengers breathless and eager, flew to that lighted wing where the council sat, and where the old king, propped up in bed, waited and fought terror.

His eyes were with many years of ruling, of disappointments and bitterness, roved the room. They came to rest at last on the photograph of a young man, which stood on his bedside table.

He was a very young man, in a uniform. He was boyish, and smiling. There was a dog beside him, and its head was on a level with his knee. He stood in the room, the eyes of the photograph gazed at one. The king knew this, and because he was quite old, and because there were few people to whom a king dares to speak his secret thoughts, he frequently spoke to the photograph. The older he grew, the more he felt, sometimes, as though it knew what he said.

"If they've got him," he said now to the picture, "it is out of my hands and into yours, my boy."

Much of his life had been spent in waiting, in waiting for a son, in waiting for that son to grow to be a man, in waiting while that son in his turn loved and married and begot a manchild, in waiting, when that son had died a violent death, for the time when his tired hands could relinquish the sceptre to his grandchild.

Quite suddenly the door opened. The old man turned his head. Just inside stood a very dirty small boy.

Behind him Prince Ferdinand William Otto was most terribly frightened. Everything was at sixes and sevens. Miss Braithwaite had been crying her head off, and on seeing him had fainted. Not that he thought it was a real faint. He had unmistakably seen her eyelids quiver. And when she came to she had ordered him no supper, and four pages of German translation, and to go to bed at seven o'clock instead of seven-thirty for a week. All the time crying, too. And then she had sent him to his grandfather, and taken aromatic ammonia.

His grandfather said nothing, but looked at him.

"Here—here I am, sir," said the crown prince from the door.

The king drew a long breath. But the silence persisted. Prince Ferdinand William Otto furtively rubbed a dusty shoe against the back of a trousers leg.

"I'm afraid I'm not very neat, sir," said Prince Ferdinand William Otto, and took a step forward. Until his grandfather commanded him, he could not advance into the room.

"Come here," said the king.

He went to the side of the bed.

"Where have you been?"

"I'm afraid—I ran away, sir."

"Why?"

Prince Ferdinand William Otto considered. It was rather an awful moment. "I don't exactly know. I just thought I would."

You see, it was really extremely difficult. To say that he was tired of things as they were would sound ungrateful. Would, indeed, be most impolite. And then, exactly why had he run away?

"Suppose," said the king, "you draw up a chair and tell me about it. We'd better talk it over, I think."

His royal highness drew up a chair, and sat on it. His feet not reaching the floor, he hooked them around the chair rung. This was permissible because, first, the king could not see them from his bed. Second, it kept his knees from shaking.

"Probably you are aware," said the king, "that you have alarmed a great many people."

"I'm sorry, sir. I didn't think—"

"A prince's duty is to think. Where did you go?"

"To the park, sir. I—I thought I'd like to see the park by myself. It's very hard to enjoy things with Miss Braithwaite, sir. She does not really enjoy the things I like. Nikky and I—"

"By 'Nikky' you mean Lieutenant Larisch?"

"Yes, sir."

"Go on."

"We like the same things, sir—the Pike's-Peak-or-Bust, and all that."

The king raised himself on his elbow. "What was that?" he demanded.

Prince Ferdinand William Otto blushed, and explained. It was Bobby's name for the peak at the top of the scenic railway. He had been on the railway. He had been—his enthusiasm carried him away. His cheeks flushed. He sat forward on the edge of his chair, and gesticulated.

"I was awfully happy, sir," he ended. "It feels like flying, only safer. And the lights are pretty. It's like fairyland. There were two or three times when it seemed as if we'd turn over, or leap the track. But we didn't."

The king lay back and thought. More than anything in the world he loved this boy. But the occasion demanded a strong hand. "You were happy," he said. "You were disobedient, you were causing grave anxiety and distress—and you were happy! The first duty of a prince is to his country. His first lesson is to obey laws. He must always obey certain laws. A king is but the servant of his people. Some day you will be the king. You are being trained for that high office now. And yet you would set the example of insubordination, disobedience, and reckless disregard of the feelings of others."

"Yes, sir," said Prince Ferdinand William Otto, feeling very small and ashamed.

"Not only that. You slipped away. You did not go openly. You sneaked off, like a thief. Are you proud of it?"

"No, sir."

"I shall," said the king, "require no promise from you. Promises are poor things to hold on. I leave this matter in your own hands, Otto. You will be punished by Miss Braithwaite, and for the next ten days you will not visit me. You may go now."

Otto slid off his chair. He was feeling exceedingly crushed. "Good night, sir," he said. And waited for his grandfather to extend his hand. But the old king lay looking straight ahead, with his eyes shut, his face white, and his hands folded over his breast.

At the door the crown prince turned and bowed. His grandfather's eyes were fixed on the two gold eagles over the door, but the photograph on the table appeared to be smiling at him.

Until late that night General Mettlich and the king talked together. The king had been lifted from his bed and sat propped in a great chair. Above his shabby dressing gown his face looked very gaunt and old. In a straight chair facing him sat his old friend and chancellor.

"What it has shown is not entirely bad," said the king, after a pause. "The boy has initiative. And he made no attempt at evasion. He is essentially truthful."

"What it has also shown, sire, is that no protection is enough. When I, who love the lad and would—when I could sleep, and let him get away, as I did—"

"The truth is," said the king, "we are both of us getting old." He tapped with his spanted fingers on the blanket that lay over his knees. "The truth is also," he observed a moment later, "that the boy has very few pleasures. He is alone a great deal."

General Mettlich raised his shaggy head. Many years of wearing a soldier's cap had not injured his heavy gray hair. He had bristling eyebrows, white now, and a short, fighting mustache. When he was irritated, or disagreed with any one, his eyebrows came down and the mustache went up.

MADE-OVER SKIRT PROBLEM

New Styles Demand That the Well-Dressed Housewife Look to Her Petticoats.

Now that the skirts are definitely narrow, the well-dressed housewife must look to her petticoats. If she is like some women she just succeeded last summer in getting an extra gore into all her old white petticoats, many of them left over from the previous vogue for narrow skirts. And now—narrow skirts are in again.

It is not such a difficult matter to make a petticoat narrower as it is to make it wider. Indeed, sometimes a worn petticoat can be used for another season in a narrower form, because the worn section can be cut out.

With the new street suits the well-dressed woman wears a very simple petticoat. In many cases it shows flat tailored seams and no ruffles, but instead a scalloped lower edge. Sometimes the scallops are buttonholed and sometimes they are bound with a bias band of silk. Jersey petticoats of a heavy quality material are made in the same way. They are also made with a scant, shaped flounce applied below the knees. Satin petticoats, with not very full plaited flounces, are, likewise, a very good investment. It is possible that you have an old satin frock containing a petticoat of this sort. If you have, rip it and then wash and iron it before making it over.

Be careful in cutting one of the new petticoats not to get it too narrow around the knees. Narrowness at this point often causes a petticoat to ride up. Another good way to keep the petticoat down where it belongs is to make the hem or lower part, if you have a scalloped petticoat, of two thicknesses of material or to band a straight flounce with a bias strip of the material on the bottom.

WOOL EMBROIDERY IS USED

Ornamentation That Is Effective on All Sorts of Fabrics—Suitable for Fancy Work.

Wool embroidery is used practically on everything—and for good reason. It is simple to do and makes an ornamentation that is effective in both line and color. It is such an inexpensive trimming that it may be considered one of the clever economies of the late war. And a touch of wool embroidery may be employed actually to give the expensive looking hand touch to ready-made wearables.

Wool embroidery is used on all sorts of fabrics, including georgette, serge, velvet and cotton crepes. It trims chapeaux, frocks for kiddies and grown-ups, too, and a multitude of fancy work from bags to table runners. One of the most popular stitches is merely a coarse darning stitch. Sometimes one row of darning stitch is alternated with another row of the same stitch in a different color. Buttonhole stitch is also much used. Sometimes little crocheted or knitted flowers are added effectively here and there on the flat work.

NEED DAINTY NECK FIXINGS

Ornamentations Are Required to Relieve the Severeness of the Collarless Lines.

There is more and more call at the neckwear counters for "something to give that collarless neckline without the bare, plain effect that is so unbecoming." Most women find one perfectly collarless neck quite enough to satisfy their longing for ultra-modishness, and a warning conveyed by their mirror sends them posthaste to the neckwear section to find something more becoming. There are various dainty neck fixings which seem to fill the bill exactly; collars that outline back and sides of a square neck opening, cowl collars that stand up from the low, collarless neck, and flat, round collars edged youthfully at the back. A pretty set of this sort is of fine white net with plaited frills of Valenciennes lace and the low, round collar is matched by cuffs of the net and lace that turn back from the wrist.

INTEREST IN EVENING DRESS

With the Trying Days of War a Thing of the Past Women Are Dressing in Gayer Clothes.

More interest is being taken in the question of evening frocks just now than at any time since America entered the war. During the trying months of the war women were too thoroughly occupied with really serious interests to spend either time or money on apparel for formal functions, and as a matter of fact there were few social functions that were not of a semipatriotic or philanthropic nature, so that simple costuming was considered in the best possible taste. All women agreed, however, that they must continue to dress well in order that the public morale might be kept in a healthy state and the all-the-day-through frock was by all odds the favorite outfit.

Now that the war is over and soldiers are returning by the thousand every week, social festivities are taking on a new lease of life and the regulation evening gown is in demand. Women in full evening dress are seen at the theaters and life everywhere is sounding a gayer note.

HAVE NOTE OF QUAINTNESS

Simpler Summer Frocks Are Being Developed in Many Alluring Demure Styles.

There is a note of quaintness in the simpler summery frocks this year; chintzes in small patterned designs are developed in many alluringly demure styles, one with tiny bright red flowers having a little white dotted swiss bibbed apron appliqued with red wool embroidery.

Hats are made of fabric to match and one model with a poke bonnet trend is equipped with long green earrings.

Peasant frocks in natural or dark colored linens have applique border designs of two-color crepes. Simple morning frocks of gingham are ruffled in white and embroidered in wool, and chemise frocks of handkerchief linen also have rather elaborate embroideries in worsted.

VASES TO HOLD THE POSIES

Vessels Regarded as a Failure as They Do Not Serve Purpose to Fullest Extent.

Highly ornamental vases are attractive in themselves, but as flower holders they may be said to be partial failures, as they do not serve their purpose to the fullest extent. They attract attention to themselves rather than set off the blooms for which they are designed.

A vase of plain material or color, or one on which the design is obscure, is more to be desired, as it presents the flowers in their full beauty, and does not distract one's attention. In the same way a vase of luster ware, of a shade that blends with the flowers it holds, is far more attractive than one of contrasting color.

Vases that are to be used for all kinds of flowers might better be green, of a dull shade, as this resembles the plant coloring and is not noticeable.

IN FAVOR OF CAPE

All-Covering Garment Is Kind to the Figure.

In Some of Its Phases It May Easily Be Fashioned by the Uninspired Dressmaker—Look Smart.

The long, all-covering cape remains a favorite with the up-to-date woman. It is tucked into the season's outfit, whether for Northern or Southern climes.

It is kind to the figure, this long cape. It has such grace, such picturesqueness, is so easily put on and off, and supplies such a comfortable extra wrap to be thrown on over a suit that its vogue is readily understood. And in some of its phases it may easily be fashioned by the uninspired dressmaker. However, one must not allow oneself to be deceived on that last count. Some of the latest models, unassuming in air, are extremely subtle in cut and adjustment, and unless one can be content with a simple circular cape it is well to be sure of a good pattern before undertaking a home-made wrap of this order.

One of the most popular of the season's cape models came out a little before the new year and has been copied to the point of monotony, yet it always manages to look smart, even though it is no longer exclusive."

It has a full, voluminous body, attached to a yoke which extends half the length of the upper arm, forming point shapes over the arm. There is a large shawl collar which is draped around the neck, crosses over in surplice fashion and fastens at the back underneath the folds of the cape. This model is well adapted for summer wear, as it leaves visible at the front, from the waist down, a panel of the pretty summery frock.

One model built upon these lines was made of gray silk figured in a soft rose-colored design.

In dark blue serge, white serge, black and white checks, black satin, gray serge, beige serge, etc., this cape is very effective, and is fairly typical of a large class of such wraps, varying only in minor details.

Some of these capes and cape-coat models are of a distinctly sporty character, built up in plaids, black checks, gay wool velours, tweeds and jerseys. Others are designed more especially for street or travel purposes, and among these are some particularly good-looking gray models in fine, soft serge or twill.

Paris is very fond of this material and color for all kinds of travel coats. It is good, too, for a separate cape for travel or motorcar, a long, ample, enveloping garment, warranted to protect the frock or suit beneath. But for hard motoring a cape is not desirable save, perhaps, to afford extra warmth or protection over a coat. The cape is not taut enough, is prone to fluttering or flying folds and flapping is the unpardonable thing in a motor outfit that asks to be taken seriously.

Beige and the various shades of light brown are modish colors, too, though Paris likes the dust gray better for this special type of garment, and it is more practical in the matter of resisting soil.

Reasonable Price for Seed.

If you must buy seed, pay your neighbor a reasonable price for selected dried seed of a variety that has made good in a neighboring field; but don't pay a stranger a fancy price for seed claimed to give miraculous yields.

Draft Horses.

Draft horses are scarce in Chicago at $275 to $300 with good 1,400 to 1,600 pound chunks at $200 to $250, but cheap, thin and plug horses are not wanted at any price.

TWO EMERGENCY CROPS

PEAS AND OATS WILL COME IN USEFUL.

Feeding Value of These Two Plants Is Very High—When Peas Are to Be Used for Soiling Cutting Takes Place Earlier Than When They Are to Be Used as Hay.

Oftentimes the failure of the regular hay crop or the necessity for an increased amount of forage is the cause for much speculation in determining a practical means of providing for the deficit. As an emergency crop there is none more suitable than a mixture of peas and oats. In fact, it is a valued dual purpose crop with those who have had experience with it since it is equally suitable for soiling, hay, silage and grain purposes. The two plants, namely peas and oats, making up the mixture, are admirably adapted for growing together.

They both have the same seasonal and climatic requirements and mature in about the same number of days. Besides the oats support the peas vines which facilitates the harvesting and curing of the crop.

At the Central Experimental Farm and several of the branch farms and stations this crop has been utilized extensively as a soiling, silage and hay crop as circumstances demanded. It is usually grown as a catch crop, where the hay crop has failed or in a regular rotation of, first year hoed crop, second year, pease and oats seeded down to clover and, third year, clover hay. Exception may be taken to peas and oats as a nurse crop, which is ordinarily justifiable where the crop is allowed to ripen for grain. On the other hand, where the peas and oats are cut in the green state, thus being removed early in the season, the disadvantage as a nurse crop for clover is practically eliminated. In the experience of the Experimental Farms the stands of clover on areas having peas and oats as the nurse crop, are practically equal to other stands of clover grown with nurse crops of wheat, barley and oats.

The cultural treatment of the soil for a crop of peas and oats under regular cropping conditions is similar to that for ordinary grain crops. Fall ploughing, disced thoroughly, in the spring until a deep, mellow seed-bed is prepared, proves most satisfactory. Sown as a catch crop where new seedings of grasses and clovers fail, a fairly satisfactory seed-bed may be prepared by either shallow ploughing or by thorough discing, depending on the compactness and nature of the soil. Older meadows or exhausted sod areas can only be prepared for crop by ploughing and discing. In sowing, the ordinary seed-drill is used. The peas and oats should be mixed thoroughly before being placed in the seed-box of the drill and from time to time as sowing proceeds the mixture should be stirred with the hand. Otherwise the peas will work down through the oats and be sown first, leaving the last part of the seeding almost pure oats. The most suitable proportions of the mixture are equal parts by weight, sown at the rate of a bushel of three bushels per acre. Suitable varieties include Golden Vine and Prussian Blue pea and Banner and O.A.C. No. 72 oats.

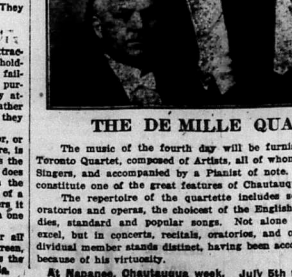
Cutting for soiling may take place before pods form on the pea vines and the oats begins as soon as they are formed and the oat kernels are in the milk stage of growth. This is also the most suitable stage at which to cut for silage. If the crop is not required for any of the foregoing purposes, it may be allowed to ripen, to be harvested for grain. Both grain and straw make good feed.

The feeding value of pea and oat hay is high, being very close to alfalfa and equal to red clover. As silage it is excellent, although it yields less and the cost of production is greater than corn ensilage.

This accommodating crop, so suited to varied conditions, is bound to become better known and more highly appreciated on a greater proportion of Canadian farms.

The Hydraulic Ram.

An engineer who is a specialist on water-supply systems, remarked the other day on the infrequent use of the hydraulic ram as a means of providing water in the right place on Canadian farms and in small towns and villages, where in so many cases power of this description would be all that is necessary to place the inhabitants on an equal footing with the people of the big cities as regards the convenience of a pressure supply of this first necessary to real comfort in living. For raising any reasonable supply of water to a higher level than that of the natural flow no other method can be compared with the use of the ram for cheapness, because, in addition to the initial expenditure for installation being less than in the case of any other system, the maintenance of a hydraulic ram is quite inexpensive and the amount of attention required by the contrivance is almost nil.



THE DE MILLE QUARTET.

The music of the fourth day will be furnished by this well-known Toronto Quartet, composed of Artists, all of whom are well known as Solo Singers, and accompanied by a Pianist of note. Their programmes will constitute one of the great features of Chautauqua week.

The repertoire of the quartette includes selections from the great oratorios and operas, the choicest of the English, Scotch, and Irish melodies standard and popular songs. Not alone as a quartette do they excel, but in concerts, recitals, oratorios, and operatic selections, each individual member stands distinct, having been accorded marked recognition because of his virtuosity.

RECORD OF CHAMPION

SOME STRIKING FACTS ABOUT REMARKABLE COW.

Rolo Mercena DeKol, a Typical Holstein and Possesses a Long Line of Canadian Ancestors—Success of Her Owner Shows Opportunities In the Holstein Business In the Dominion.

In connection with the record of Rolo Mercena DeKol, owned by Mr. J. E. Ellsworth, of Norwich, Ont., our five-year-old Canadian-bred cow which recently gained the world's championship for butter in the 7-day and 30-day divisions, and whose production, according to the report by the supervisors of the test, are as follows: 1 day, 125.8 milk, 5.57 butter; 7 days, 738.7 milk, 31.92 butter; 30 days, 2920.5 milk, 126.01 butter; 60 days, 5795.1 milk, 237.49 butter. The secretary of the Canadian Holstein-Friesian Association calls attention to three striking features, as follows:—

The first is that a Canadian-bred cow, with several generations of purely Canadian ancestry behind her, should establish a new world's record in both the 7-day and 30-day divisions. Canadian breeders may justly rejoice over this new honor, one of the many creditable laurels won since the day when Aita Posch set up a world's record for butter as a senior two-year-old. I need only recall May Echo Sylvia, world's champion for milk from one to one hundred days; Carnation King Sylvia, world's record-holder for cattle of all ages and breeds in the matter of price; Hei Loo Pietertje, champion two-year-old for butter for seven, thirty and sixty days; Mildred Pietertje Abbekerk, champion senior four-year-old for milk; Colony Aggie Pietertje, champion two-year-old for one year under strictly official test; Zarilda Clothilde 3rd DeKol, until recently champion mature cow for milk in strictly official test; Lakeview Dutchland Calamity Rose, champion two-year-old with first calf, and Miss La Honda, champion butter cow in fair ground test, to show that, considering the number of cattle owned in Canada, our breeders have done their part to place this country on the Holstein map. The remarkable yearly record soon to be announced for Mr. Houck's great cow, Jemima Johanna, of Riverside, will bring new honors to Canadian-bred and developed Holsteins.

The second feature which I like is that Rolo Mercena DeKol is a typical Holstein. We want milk as well as butter in our records, and with her 125 lbs. per day Rolo is delivering the goods. She is a cow of very excellent conformation, straight in her lines, particularly level on the rump and with a shapely udder. The truly great cow is the one that is suited by production and individuality to be the dam of high class heifer-headers. It is a source of satisfaction to find both type and production so highly developed in our new world's champion. Another creditable point in this record is that the best seven days' production came at the end and not at the beginning of her sixty day test. Rolo Mercena DeKol is not what is popularly known as "a morning glory."

The third feature is that this record is a striking example of the wonderful opportunities in the Holstein business. Here is a young man, just starting out for himself and with a very modest capital, accomplishing what multi-millionaires have striven in vain to do. It shows that our young men can, with a small expenditure, select cows showing type and indications of production and by giving them good care develop animals equal to the best in the world. Rolo Mercena DeKol would not be called fashionably bred, she has few high record ancestors in her pedigree, but she came from families that were profitable in a commercial way and lacked only the opportunity to make a name for themselves in official test. Undoubtedly, there are hundreds of cows throughout the United States and Canada that would show almost as amazing results as Mr. Hanmer's cow, if only they were given a chance to show their capabilities."

CHANCE FOR BUTTER-MAKER.

Present Prices Offer an Inducement to Farm Dairyman.

High price for butter at this particular stage of the world's history is to some extent explained in the unusually heavy demand for all dairy products, combined with the fact that neither the feed nor the farm help situation has been very greatly relieved as yet since the worst period of the war. Of late years, and chiefly on account of the war-time demand in Europe, other dairy products and principally condensed milk and milk powder manufacture has increased to a remarkable extent, with the result that the home consumer who bids for a supply of whole milk or butter meets with keen competition. The superior economy of condensed milk or milk powder as a means of preserving milk for human consumption, as compared with either butter or cheese, and the added fact that, in either of these forms the total milk yield can be transported to great advantage, makes it possible for manufacturers of these food articles to bid successfully against the butter or whole milk of cream for city supply.

If these conditions fully accounted for the existing prices for butter, the public might be satisfied with the situation in view of the importance of encouraging export trade and so inciting the producers to increased effort that would ultimately result in a restoration of the balance of supply and demand. But, as has always been the case when perishable food products reach an unusually high price, suspicion begins to turn toward the dealers who may be holding such supplies to a large extent in cold storage, and if this suspicion is not refuted bad feeling will result and will increase until serious trouble occurs. However, this matter is for others than the individual farmer to deal with, and are usually looked after by the consumers, who are the most affected.

In the circumstances, there is an opportunity for the farmer to benefit both himself and the consumer, however. High prices for creamery butter doubtless drive the consumer to a more particular consideration of the dairy brands, and just now when there is a difference of as much as 10 cents in the price of the two, dairy butter is attracting a great deal of attention. Yet it would appear that there must be considerable obstacles in the way of producing a consistent good supply of dairy butter if one can judge by the offerings made in the retail stores from week to week.

This unevenness in the quality of butter from any one dairy is doubtless due to want of knowledge of the methods used by factory makers for ensuring even body, taste, coloring, etc., in their product from one churning to another, and the trouble could be overcome by the farm buttermaker taking a course in home dairying at one of the dairy schools. Unfortunately there is another cause of complaint with regard to dairy butter, which gives rise to suspicion as to the intentions of the maker in many instances. This trouble is, the condition of softness and apparent high moisture content in many brands, which leads to waste of the butter when it is brought into use at the table. Probably more of this trouble is due to accident than to design, but it should be remembered that there is a law that sets a limit on the amount of moisture content in butter offered for sale, and the inspectors responsible for the carrying out of this law are likely to become particularly active in a time like the present, when a great number of consumers are forced to consider very carefully the amount of food value received for their cash expenditure.

Nature and the Indian

The Indian never liked work but he wanted his squaw to get well as soon as possible so that she could do the work and let him hunt. Therefore he dug papoose root for her, for that was their great remedy for female weaknesses.

Dr. Pierce uses the same root—called Blue Cohosh—in his "Favorite Prescription" skillfully combined with other agents that make it more effective.

Women who are worn out, who suffer from pain at regular or irregular intervals, who are nervous or dizzy at times, should take this reliable, temperance, herbal tonic which a doctor of 40 years' practice prescribed many years ago. Now sold by druggists, in tablets and liquid, as Dr Pierce's Favorite Prescription.

WOODSTOCK, ONT.—"I cannot say enough in praise of Dr. Pierce's Medicines. I had nervous prostration and was completely 'down and out.' I was so bad the doctors considered mine a hopeless case. I was much discouraged and was ready to give up when I began taking the 'Favorite Prescription' and the 'Golden Medical Discovery.' These medicines put me on my feet again and gave me the only real relief. Being a nurse I have recommended Dr. Pierce's Medicines to many, especially the 'Favorite Prescription.' I know of many a young mother to whom I have recommended 'Favorite Prescription' that has been wonderfully helped.

"I am glad to lend my name in connection with Dr. Pierce's Medicines, knowing how good they are."—Mrs. A. L. McLEAN, 351 John Street.

A Friend in need

K&S

This illustrates an actual case where a K. & S. tube was used to pull a friend out of the ditch. While not advisable to use a tube this way, it can be done with a K. & S. tube—the tubes that are often known to outlast the car itself.

LAMINATED

See this cross-section of a K. & S. tube. Note its construction.

Every K. & S. tube is LAMINATED—built up layer upon layer, and vulcanized in one piece.

The strong, elastic rubber is compounded from the finest ingredients, preventing it from becoming brittle or porous, and preserving its satiny softness.

Try one K. & S. tube, and compare its length of service with that of any other make.

K. & S. tubes cost no more than others.

You might as well have the best.

KAISER BILL

German Bill when he was the Kaiser used to talk very much about God. Now, that he is the ex-kaiser, he has considerably more time to think than talk about God. He had no hesitation in the days of his prosperity in declaring that he was the Almighty's vice-regent on earth. What thinks he now? Lest we forget that which the ex-kaiser not only thought but said in former years, it may be interesting to produce that which he said no later than July 17, 1917, or less than two years ago as follows:

"God is on our side, and with his help we shall win our way to a peace which shall hold Germany safe forever.

"The Entente must be made to pay all Germany's war costs, including the cost of German armaments for the next 40 years, amounting to twenty thousand million pounds—part paid in raw materials and by the surrender of half the Entente's merchant fleets, and seizure of all private and public property in the annexed territories.

"Those misguided people who are bubbling over with sympathy for the dethroned and who are influenced by his whinings should ponder over the utterance quoted.

THRIFT STILL NECESSARY

The need of continued thrift on the part of Canadians is set forth in the following, which is opening paragraph, in the May Commercial Letter, issued by the Canadian Bank of Commerce: Need for personal and community thrift is as great now as in the black days of 1918 when it was realized that the most stringent self-denial was requisite to enable us to meet the demands of the Government for more and yet more money with which to carry on the war. The great dread which hung over all a year ago has happily been removed, but we still have a duty to perform, and it is essential that it should be faced. It is necessary to carry on public works that will aid production, such as roads and railways, on a considerable scale, in order to provide employment for the workers. We have also a heavy burden of interest imposed on us by the war, and we have great obligations to those who were maimed as well as to the dependents of those who laid down their lives for our security. These obligations can be met only by a continuance of self-denial on the part of every one in the Dominion."

A Canadian Choir.

Considerable success has been enjoyed in England by the Bramshott Canadian Male Voice Choir, a vocal organization conducted by Sergt. J. Adamson, who was well known in Toronto before the war as an organist, choirmaster and music teacher. Since last Autumn this male choir, made up of Canadian soldiers, has given a series of concerts in London and elsewhere in England, their programs including compositions like Gounod's "By Babylon's Wave," Edward German's "O Peaceful Night," and the dramatic part-song, "The Martyrs of the Arena," by De Rille. People who are interested by church music will doubtless be familiar with Sergt's Adamson's sacred compositions. He has also written a number of songs, two of which, "Tintagel" and "The Wayfarer," were given at the All-British concerts, London, Eng., and by the well known English mezzo-soprano, Miss Olga Haley.
